SHERMAN HALL

The construction of Sherman Hall began in November 1900. The foundation and superstructure of Western's first building were built by the Tri-City Construction Co. of Davenport, Iowa. Sherman Hall was completed in 1902, and included classrooms, work rooms and laboratories, offices, a gymnasium, a museum, an auditorium, and a library. Western - and Sherman Hall - officially opened Monday, September 23, 1902. Today, Sherman Hall houses administrative and business offices.

WETZEL HALL

Opening in September 1970, Wetzel Hall was home to tens of thousands of Western students for nearly four decades. The hall was named after Wayne Wetzel, a former Industrial Arts Professor, who graduated from Western in 1911 and went on to have a 47 year career at the institution. Wetzel was the 18th former faculty member on Western's campus to have a building named after him. Dedicated on April 3, 1971, Wetzel Hall, which cost $6.8 million to build, was a 13-story building that housed approximately 824 students in male and female wings. On July 14, 2012, WIU bid farewell to the building as it was decommissioned and imploded, ending the use of the residence hall after 42 years.
