Signature academic programs at Western

From offering bachelor’s degrees in forensic chemistry to housing one of the largest law enforcement programs of its kind in the nation to providing the first Bachelor of Fine Arts in Musical Theatre program at an Illinois public institution, Western Illinois University offers a number of standout undergraduate programs.

Noted for their size, unique area of concentration for undergraduate students, Centennial Honors Program opportunities, demand for graduates and accessibility—including the University’s sports broadcasting program, which provides hands-on experience from day one—Western’s signature programs have garnered recognition for the graduates they produce, noted Admissions Director Andy Borst.

“These programs are just a few examples from Western’s broad spectrum of academic majors and programs, which includes 66 undergraduate degree options,” Borst added.

Signature Academic Programs at Western Illinois University include:

- Accountancy
- Agriculture
- Biology
- Engineering
- Forensic Chemistry
- Law Enforcement & Justice Administration
- Musical Theatre
- Nursing
- Recreation, Park & Tourism Administration
- Sports Broadcasting
- Supply Chain Management
- Teacher Education

WIU to increase admissions standards

Beginning with the Fall 2014 semester, Western Illinois University will increase admissions standards for new freshmen. The University’s Council of Admission, Graduation and Academic Standards and the Faculty Senate recently voted to support the change in admissions standards, with the approval of President Jack Thomas and Provost and Academic Vice President Ken Hawkinson ’78 M.A. ’79.

According to Admissions Director Andy Borst, the new admissions standards will be based primarily on previous academic achievement measured by high school grade point average and future academic potential (measured by ACT composite score). Applicants who are on the margins of the new admissions standards will be given a comprehensive evaluation, including a review of a personal statement, recommendations, academic goals, core academic classes and consideration for other circumstances.

“Great universities demonstrate a deep understanding of their students. Our new admissions standards represent students who have the greatest potential for academic success,” Thomas noted. “This change in admissions standards represents a multi-year analysis of our students. WIU will continue to place our priorities firmly on student success. While we are increasing our admissions standards, we will continue to be committed to our core value of educational opportunity.

Dear Alumni & Friends,

On behalf of your WIU Alumni Association, I am pleased to announce this year’s recipients of the Distinguished Alumni Awards. John Garvey ’78 and Karen Kolodzey ’78 received our highest honor at the May commencement ceremonies. We also welcomed the newest graduates to the now nearly 117,000 member Alumni Association. We had a great end of the semester and hope to see you at an event this summer! Visit wiu.edu/alumni/events to see where we’ll be in the coming months!

Join the crowd... Sometimes it's OK to be a follower!

We are pleased to announce our inaugural quarterly social media contest:

SEND US YOUR FUTURE LEATHERNECK PHOTO!

Description: Do you have a child, age newborn to 12 years old, who is a future Western Illinois University Leatherneck? We want to see our Future Leathernecks supporting WIU! Snap a photo of your child in Leatherneck purple and gold gear and send it to us. The photo can be taken anywhere. Be creative!

How to enter: E-mail your photo(s) to ae-spelman@wiu.edu or mail it to: WIU Alumni Association, 1 University Circle, Macomb, IL 61455 with your Future Leatherneck’s first name and birthdate. Any other relevant information is welcome!

Deadlines: The Future Leatherneck Photo Contest began June 15, 2013 and ends August 15, 2013 at 4:30 p.m. (CST). No purchase necessary, and the contest is open to all alumni, friends and fans of WIU. One entry per child. Photos in digital format are preferred.

By submitting your photo, you do hereby give WIU its assigns, licensees, and legal representatives the irrevocable right to use the name and photograph in all forms and media (including the Internet) by WIU, and waive any right to inspect or approve the finished version(s), including written copy that may be created in connection therewith. Winners will be selected by a committee and will not be based on “likes,” etc.

From the President

I would like to congratulate and welcome the newest members of the Western Illinois University Alumni Association, our May 2013 graduates. Please remember that you will always be a part of the Leatherneck family, and we want you to remain involved with your alma mater.

While the state’s economic situation has resulted in continued delayed reimbursements for Western, as well as the possibility of a further decrease in state appropriations for Fiscal Year 2014, we remain committed to providing a quality, well-rounded education and outstanding support services to our students. We also remain committed to retaining our employees. We will continue to work with our legislators and other universities to seek support for higher education. I’d like to thank you, our alumni and friends, for your continuing generosity and support.

Despite the current economic challenges facing our University, we have had numerous accomplishments during this academic year. Western continues to be ranked as a top tier regional university by U.S. News and World Report and a Best Midwestern College by the Princeton Review. The University was also once again selected as a “Military Friendly School” by G.I. Jobs Magazine and as a “Best for Vets College” by Military Times EDGE magazine.

The University’s Bachelor of Science in Engineering degree was accredited by the Engineering Accreditation Commission of the Accreditation Board for Engineering and Technology (ABET), our graphic communication program was awarded national accreditation through the Accrediting Council for Collegiate Graphic Communications, Inc., and the University Counseling Center has been re-accredited by the International Association of Counseling Services (IACS), Inc.

We launched a new mentor program in the fall to help new freshmen transition to Western. The Building Connections program paired faculty and staff with new freshmen to assist these students and provide the resources they needed to succeed. The new students who participated in the program had a retention rate from fall to spring of 85.6 percent, compared with a 75.3 percent retention rate for those who chose not to participate.

In April, Western received its 10,000th application for freshmen admission for Fall 2013, a 2.3 percent increase compared to last year, and we recently extended the 100th offer for our prestigious Centennial Honors Scholarship for Fall 2013. Western has seen a notable increase in interest from high-achieving high school seniors for the Fall 2013 semester, and beginning with the Fall 2014 semester, Western will increase admissions standards for freshmen.

Finally, Western has added new degrees to its Signature Academic Programs, which are unique academic programs noted for their size, unique area of concentration for undergraduate students, Centennial Honors College opportunities, demand for graduates and accessibility. The Signature Academic Programs include accounting, agriculture, biology, engineering, forensic chemistry, law enforcement and justice administration, musical theatre, nursing, recreation, park and tourism administration, sports broadcasting, supply chain management and teacher education.

Connolly and Olson halls reopened in August, and construction has started on Phase II of the Quad Cities Riverfront campus. Thompson Hall renovations are underway, and the University Union remodeling project will begin when the spring semester comes to a close.

Thank you for your continued loyalty to Western Illinois University. I hope to see you at Western for the annual Homecoming celebration Oct. 11-12. I also look forward to seeing many of you at our upcoming alumni and other events.

All my best,

Jack Thomas
Alpha Tau chapter of AGR celebrates 50th Founder’s Day

By Teresa Koltzenburg '92 M.S. ’11

One of the staple sites along the Highway 67 route traveling south into Macomb is the Alpha Gamma Rho (AGR) House, located at 1010 N. Lafayette St. Directly west of the Oakwood Cemetery, the stately brown brick structure with the reddish roof is the longtime home of the Alpha Tau Chapter and presents a well-kept yard (in which is landscaped the Greek letters representing the fraternity). For past and present members of Alpha Gamma Rho, and many in the University community, the distinguished home serves as a point of pride for those entering Macomb and the area around Western Illinois University.

In Spring 2013, the Alpha Tau Chapter celebrated its 50th year on the Western campus, and commemorated its Founder’s Day with more than 400 alumni returning to Macomb for the celebration. According to Former Chapter President Jeremy Wolf (Dixon, IL), a year’s worth of planning went into the event and required input from current AGR members and Western students, as well as help from AGR alumni.

“Ted Lee ’97, Mark Dempsey ’87, Jay Streitmatter ’06, and I worked on the event through December, and after that, with newly elected officers, Ben Dahlstrom (Sherard, IL), (president) and Trey Forbes (Lone Tree, IA) (alumni relations), Ted and Mark finished up planning the event. WIU and AGR alumni, such as Larry Ropp ’63, and many others also helped by contacting their fellow Alpha Gamma Rho brothers who attended Western in their individual eras. We all used Facebook to help coordinate the event,” Wolf explained.

Ropp, who was a charter member (“Pin # 8”) for the Alpha Tau Chapter and now works as an independent associate for Legal Shield, said the members of the 2013 Alumni Board of Alpha Tau of AGR at Western were very involved in coordinating the celebration, which included a variety of social events over the first weekend in March. Board members include: Dempsey, president; Brian Yung ’96, treasurer; Lee, secretary; Alex Borkgren ’09; Mark Howard ’87; Matt Tomlin ’05; Scott Hall ’93; Rock Katschnig ’77; and Perry Tenhouse ’87.

According to a brief article in the March 20 edition of the “The Greek Gazette” (a newsletter serving Western’s Greek community) by Jacob Wooldridge (Rushville, IL), the weekend celebration culminated in a banquet held in the Donald S. Spencer Student Recreation Center and featured a presentation by Loren Kruse, former editor-in-chief of “Successful Farming” magazine.

“There were many different social events held throughout the weekend that allowed old and new members alike to get to know each other and share stories of their experiences in the house,” Wooldridge wrote in “Western’s Alpha Gamma Rho Chapter Turns 50.”

“One alumna remembered working on the new house just after it was purchased in 1964. [He said,] ‘We would go to class in the morning, then come to 1010 and work until the sun went down.’”

In addition to helping plan the fraternity’s 50th annual Founder’s Day activities, Ropp stays involved by keeping AGR members connected and up-to-date about their AGR brothers who attended Western.

CBT adds online graduate business certificates

Starting in Fall 2013, the WIU College of Business and Technology (CBT) will offer two new graduate programs: a Post-Baccalaureate Certificate in Business Administration and a Post-Baccalaureate Certificate in Supply Chain Management (SCM). Each program requires 12 semester hours (four courses) of specific graduate courses, which can be taken on the Macomb campus, at WIU-Quad Cities in Moline or online.

The certificates were developed in response to market demand, according to John Drea, CBT associate dean and MBA director.

“We surveyed WIU alumni and found that many were interested in continuing their education through WIU, but a full MBA degree didn’t fit their immediate plans,” said Drea. “The certificates provide added convenience by being available on both campuses and online, and they can serve as a nice stepping stone towards the completion of an MBA from WIU.”

The certificate programs were developed over a 14-month period, with input from faculty, alumni and business advisory groups. The Post-Baccalaureate Certificate in Business Administration consists of MBA courses in accounting, finance, management and marketing. MBA Committee Director and Finance Professor Pepipi Kenny noted, “We felt this certificate would provide a broad foundation for enhancing a career in business, and the courses can be applied towards our MBA degree for students who choose to continue their education.”

Students who complete the Business Administration Certificate would have 21 hours remaining to complete a WIU MBA degree.

The Post-Baccalaureate Certificate in Supply Chain Management consists of four MBA courses that cover supply chain fundamentals, transportation and logistics management, and supply chain management electives that allow a student to tailor the courses to their specific career needs.

“The Supply Chain Certificate is ideal for someone working in the SCM field who wants to advance,” said Jim Patterson, CBT assistant dean at WIU-QC and supply chain management associate professor. “Our SCM advisory committee is supportive of the graduate certificate as a way to help meet the education needs of the logistics and supply chain fields.”

One of the unique aspects of both certificates is that they can be completed through face-to-face courses on the Macomb and Quad Cities campuses or online. “We carefully developed eight online MBA courses over the past year, using many of the best practices we’ve seen for online education,” said Drea.

“The courses were developed by the same faculty who teach the courses in the classroom. Students can mix and match courses from Macomb, the Quad Cities or online depending on what fits their schedule and learning styles. It’s very flexible.”

Admission to the certificate program requires either a 3.0 or higher undergraduate GPA, a 2.75 GPA and significant work experience, or admission into the MBA program. Students who are admitted into one of the certificate programs and wish to continue on to the MBA degree must still apply to and be accepted into the WIU MBA program.

For more information about the Post-Baccalaureate Business Administration or Supply Chain Management certificates, contact Drea at (309) 298-2442 or at jt-drea@wiu.edu.
Ever heard of Zaarly? If you haven’t, it won’t be long. Zaarly is an online platform that supports a local marketplace, and it is growing, thanks in part to WIU College of Business and Technology alumnus Shane “Mac” McSimov ’08.

Mac is director of product for Zaarly, where he was part of the original team that started the company two years ago. In that time, it has grown to include five cities: New York, Los Angeles, Seattle, San Francisco and Kansas City (MO). With a base of 55 employees, Zaarly is expanding to other cities to allow more people to buy with the platform, which gives small business owners the tools in the online world to run their whole business from end to end.

“Mobile and (the concept of) ‘local’ is changing how people make a living and the world is becoming more like a small town world from 100 years ago,” said Mac. “We help connect local entrepreneurs with a whole new marketplace.”

The long-term goal for Zaarly is to help 10 million people make a living doing what they love, he added. Investors include Ashton Kutcher and Meg Whitman (the former CEO of eBay).

In terms of industry trends, Mac noted the macro trend is that freelance economies are growing and will continue to grow. As technology continues to evolve and there is more transparency into how small business can make money, entrepreneurship is going to be more prevalent. He emphasized that the mobile elements of the platform are key.

“You layer mobile into this and people can monetize their time when they couldn’t before. When you add social media and trust on top of mobile, then the person begins to build a community and really great things happen,” he said.

Mac wrote a book, “Stop with the BS,” in 2012. And, with Zaarly growing at such a fast pace, he is much more visible as a national speaker. Reflecting back on the book, he said “Always Learning” is the book he would write today.

“Building a start-up, I learned that there’s so much that you don’t learn in the classroom,” he said.

Mac also said that the toughest parts of that building process are pushing forward, executing and fighting self doubt.

“Everyone thinks it’s about the idea. Wrong. There are many bad ideas that were executed well and became great businesses. Keeping the lights on, hiring great employees, retaining great employees and staying focused on the core of your business to go from an idea to a real, sustainable company is much more about putting your head down and getting all the right people on the bus rather than having a great idea,” Mac said.

Mac is driven by that simple principle: never hide ideas, tell everyone—it’s the key to finding people to join any venture. He readily points out that nothing great was, or will be, built alone, and relationships are the key.

“Life is about the journey, not the destination. Whether we succeed or fail, it doesn’t matter because the people you fight wars with are the people you go back to when you want to fight another,” he said. “Trust and respect are the only thing that really matters.”

Mac’s journey has included more than Zaarly and a book. He has also been involved in the start-up of other companies, including Gist.com, which ultimately sold to BlackBerry for more than $40 million.

Mac noted that he had an influential mentor at Gist, T.A. McCann.

“He took a chance on me to help him build Gist.com,” Mac said. “He changed my life by teaching me the power of relationships, managing your network, adding value before asking and building world class teams to start companies. He won the America’s Cup in 1994 and sailed around the world as a professional sailor for eight years.”

McCann taught Mac that the best people are never looking for jobs. They have to be convinced to join a venture.

“On a sailboat you have 11 positions, and every single person is the best in the world at that one thing and that’s how he thinks about building companies,” he said. “You have to find and convince the best in the world to join you to get your company started and have a chance at winning.”

Before that advice, Mac thought he could start things and do them all by himself. McCann supported Mac’s idea of hosting “Ask” dinners—small dinner gatherings for people with big ideas (http://asksummit.org).

“Curiosity is the greatest trait any employee can have, and we both have this attitude that we are always learning. The people who’ve attended the dinners have changed my life.”

Mac has come a long way from his days as a college student in Macomb. When asked about his favorite faculty at WIU, he quickly said, “I don’t pick favorites, I just share who made an impact on me and who I remember. Glenn Haynes ’95 M.A. ’97, Tara Westerhold, Dr. Joe, Dr. Tripp and Mrs. Harper ’73 MS-Ed ’75—because they were more like friends than teachers. They took the extra effort to build relationships and trust with students.”

He joked that it helped him attend class more.

“Knowing that we live in a world where everything we do will outlive us—growing up, I barely knew who my grandpa was, maybe a couple of photos. My grandkids and great-grandkids will know everything about me—what I thought every day, photos of every day of my life and a timeline of my life,” Mac said. “That’s incredible, and I hope to build something that makes a dent on the world, outlives myself and makes my great grandkids proud.”
Zimmerman earns CPSM

In order to keep current with the latest trends for her WIU classrooms, Supply Chain Management (SCM) Instructor Honey Zimmerman ’02 MBA ’04 has earned the Institute of Supply Management’s endorsement as a Certified Professional in Supply Management (CPSM). This designation ties in with her existing certification as a Certified Purchasing Manager (CPM), and is complemented by her Six-Sigma Greenbelt Certification, which she earned in 2006.

“In the WIU Supply Chain Management Program, we stress the importance of faculty having professional experience prior to teaching,” Zimmerman said. “Since the business environment is always changing, I believe it is important to also stay relevant. I don’t want to become stagnant in my teaching, so I attend conferences geared towards practitioners, keep my certifications current and earn new ones. Additionally, SCM faculty realize the significance of being connected to our industry partners and recruiters. We want to ensure we are teaching what our students need and what companies expect them to know. Activities like these, I feel, help me be the best teacher I can be.”

Zimmerman began her teaching career at WIU in January 2011. She has six years of industrial experience in various supply chain management functions. “Although I love to teach, I also love to learn,” she said. “I hope I never stop growing, professionally and personally. In fact, I’m already thinking that the next professional certification I want to earn is the CPSD (Certified Professional in Supplier Diversity). We cover this topic extensively in the strategic sourcing class.”

After finishing her MBA in 2004, Zimmerman took a position at bearing manufacturer NTN Bower Corporation in Macomb as a buyer of both direct and indirect goods and services. In her professional roles, she also has negotiated pricing, terms and conditions with suppliers, negotiated and arranged service contracts, contracted with suppliers to implement vendor-managed programs, and managed more than 3,900 suppliers from at least nine countries. As the Continuous Improvement Trainer, Zimmerman created NTN Bower’s initial lean manufacturing procedures and trained their entire workforce.

CBT Fresh-I Program beneficial to students, businesses

Three Western Illinois University students from the College of Business and Technology (CBT) are part of an inaugural “remote internship” program to help companies across the country.

During the Spring 2013 semester, students from the CBT’s marketing and graphic communication programs worked with Gene Hyde Logistics, Inc., of Lakeland (FL). Students who worked on a marketing plan for the transportation company include marketing majors Heather Smith, a junior from LaSalle (IL) and Daniel Szabo, a senior from Hampshire (IL) and graphic communication major Alison Ebbing, a senior from Mount Sterling (IL).

WIU Department of Management and Marketing Chair Craig Conrad ’89 MBA ’91 said the program matches students with companies that have issues they need solved. During the spring semester, Smith, Szabo and Ebbing completed a marketing audit for the company and developed a marketing plan. The students were led by WIU Marketing and Management Professor James Kenny.

“This semester is a pilot for the program, which helps us work with business partners remotely,” said Conrad. “These students are learning to work with someone they may never meet. This is experiential learning at its best. Programs like this are well accepted in the business arena and are a proven way to work with industry partners.”

The businesses pay the CBT for the assistance on a sliding scale, ranging from $2,500 - $10,000.

Students interested in taking part in the program must submit a resume and go through the interview process.

“From a potential employer’s viewpoint, students get a great amount of experience,” Conrad said. This semester’s internship brought students knowledge they can carry with them to their future careers.

“I have learned to effectively communicate through conference calls and email correspondence with my professors, the client and my peers,” Szabo said. “I have also learned to work with a team to develop a marketing audit, lead generation and marketing strategy planning.”

Smith said her work with Fresh-I has led to one of the best experiences of her academic life at WIU.

“This was a real world marketing experience that has enhanced my understanding and practical knowledge of exactly what a marketing audit and plan consists of in a professional setting,” she said. “The intangibles I learned from the remote internship are teamwork, time management skills, organization, application from classroom to business and planning, to name a few. I would certainly suggest this project to any marketing student in the future and hope to have the opportunity to be a part of it again myself. With the guidance and mentorship from Dr. Conrad and Dr. Kenny, I learned the ins and outs of an extremely pivotal, prosperous and growing industry, which I could see myself in after graduation.”

Ebbing said her experiences through the internship have been valuable, especially working remotely with a business.

“It has taught me about freelancing and working with companies from across states,” she said. “This has opened up a whole new field of work for me as a graphic designer.”

Facilities Management donates equipment to CBT program

The students in the classrooms of the Western Illinois University Department of Engineering Technology are benefitting from the University’s decision to discontinue the use of coal to heat the school’s buildings.

During the Spring 2013 semester, the University’s Facilities Management department donated surplus equipment from the former coal operation, including electronic controls and sensors.

In December 2011, the WIU Board of Trustees voted to discontinue the use of coal on campus, transitioning instead to the use of natural gas. The large coal stack on the southeast side of campus has since been taken down in a brick-by-brick demolition process.

Engineering Technology Professor Dave Hunter ‘88 M.S. ‘90 said the donated equipment will be used to build electronic models in the classroom. Some of the equipment will also be used on the WIU-Quad Cities campus to help reduce the need to transport materials between the two campuses.

“We can use many of the items in labs as we construct automated cells similar to those used in modern manufacturing facilities,” Hunter said. “Most of the donated items replicate items we currently use, but replaces them with more modern models. The department is very excited because this is tens of thousands of dollars in items we don’t have to buy that can be put directly into our labs.”

Students from a variety of majors will benefit from the donation, including those in engineering technology and renewable energy.

For more information on Western’s Department of Engineering Technology, visit wiu.edu/cbt/engineering_technology/.

We could not have done it without you!

This spring, the College of Business and Technology awarded more than $150,000 in scholarships to students for the 2013-14 academic year. Many thanks to all of our alumni and friends for your annual support—every gift, no matter the size, impacts our students and assists them in their academic pursuits.
Aguirre called to establish charity in Ecuador

By Jodi Pospeschil

It was a church sermon that led Western Illinois University alumnus Oscar Aguirre M.A. ’99 MBA ’00 to start an Ecuadorian charity to benefit those suffering as a result of the worse financial crisis in his country’s history.

Aguirre’s charity, Pan da Vida, is based in Quita, Ecuador and operates with the theme, “Sharing the gospel. Helping the less fortunate.” The non-profit Christian foundation, which he runs with wife, Lori, strives to meet the basic needs of food, clothing, healthcare and school supplies for families in his region. Pan da Vida also offers programming for Bible teaching, a club for kids and parents, health care prevention and promotion, a flea market, a microbusiness program and summer programs.

“I believe God called me to do this,” Aguirre said. “In Ecuador, lots of country people, many indigenous, migrated to the main cities to beg. In front of my church there were many every Sunday.”

The spark that led to the development of Pan da Vida came in 2000, shortly after Aguirre heard a church sermon on Matthew V and the Beatitudes.

“I left the church thinking, ’Am I righteous? Am I merciful? Am I hungry for righteousness? And if so, how am I showing it?’” he said. “At the same moment, a little shoe-shining boy crossed my path and asked if he could clean my shoes. I let him, but when he started I felt ashamed.”

Aguirre said he heard a voice in his head saying, “Oscar, I have given you all you have wanted—you went to the U.S., you got two master’s degrees, you’ve got a 10-year-old boy cleaning your shoes?”

Aguirre met his wife, Lori, in January 2006 and they were married in September 2007. As a nurse practitioner, Lori was a natural fit with Pan da Vida’s public health programming.

Before Aguirre came to Western, he was a financial adviser for the State Bank of Ecuador and then a corporate trainer for Exxon Mobil of Ecuador.

After returning to Ecuador, Aguirre became the international manager for Desempré, a family-owned consulting company, a position he still holds. He has developed training products related to leadership, team building, customer service, strategic planning, sales and motivation. He teaches at seminars and conferences around Ecuador and in other Latin American countries and the U.S.

Aguirre said his time at WIU benefitted him “greatly and in many ways.”

“I have a unique combination of skills that has placed me in a niche market of professionals in my country that has been very beneficial to my line of work,” he said. “I am bilingual, and a Fulbright Scholar with two master’s degrees from WIU.”

Since leaving Western, Aguirre said he keeps in contact with several of his former teachers, including CBT Associate Dean John Drea. He also has contact with several former classmates and keeps connected to WIU through the Alumni Association and through the University’s Facebook page.

He also tries to visit Western whenever he is in the Midwest and said he would love to explore the opportunity to speak on campus or have WIU student groups come to Ecuador.

Aguirre also has a cherished album of photographs from his time at Western that includes, “my first time in Macomb, my first Homecoming parade and my first football game.” The WIU Department of Economics also honored Aguirre with an “Outstanding Student” plaque prior to the receipt of his first degree.

For more information about Aguirre and his charity, visit http://pandavida.org/ec.

Dobson named Fulbright Scholar to Romania

Western Illinois University was honored this spring to have two of its professors named winners of Fulbright Scholarships to teach abroad.

The professors were WIU Management Professor Joe Dobson and WIU-Quad Cities Assistant Professor Daniel Malachuk, of the WIU Department of English and Journalism.

Dobson, of WIU’s College of Business and Technology (CBT), received the scholarship to teach management classes in Romania during the Spring 2014 semester. He will teach at the University of Babes-Bolyai and his course load will include principles of management and advanced organizational behavior.

The idea to teach in Romania came after Dobson went to a Canadian teaching conference over the summer and met two Romanian professors from American universities. During the conference, he talked with the professors about his interest in teaching in Eastern Europe.

After some lengthy discussions with the Romanian University, Dobson received an invitation to teach the classes.

“I had to send my syllabus, and they came back with the invitation,” Dobson said. “But they said, ‘We can’t afford to pay you,’ and they suggested I apply for a Fulbright award.”

The Fulbright scholarship will pay Dobson’s expenses of teaching in Romania, including travel and lodging costs.

The University of Babes-Bolyai has about 50,000 students. Dobson said university officials were interested in his teaching because of the accreditation of WIU’s CBT by the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB).

“Everything just fell into place,” Dobson said. “I was pleasantly surprised when I received the Fulbright letter, I was very honored. The Fulbright Scholarship shows that there is support for cross-cultural exchanges.”

Dobson will live in Romania from February through June 2014. In addition to working in a new classroom structure, he looks forward to traveling in the region.

Previously, Dobson has taken classes of WIU students to Europe for 10- and 14-day educational trips.

The J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Program was developed by the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs of the United States Department of State. Since the program began nearly 60 years ago, more than 300,000 Fulbright Scholars have been named to study and teach in more than 150 countries.

For more information about the Fulbright program, visit fulbright.state.gov.

Malachuk named Fulbright Scholar to Germany

With Western Illinois University boasting two Fulbright scholars in 2013 and three within the last two years, Associate Professor of English Daniel Malachuk, of the WIU-Quad Cities campus and the WIU College of Arts and Sciences, has been appointed to serve his 2013-2014 sabbatical teaching in Germany.

WIU Marketing Professor Joe Dobson was appointed a Fulbright Scholar to Romania this year, and retired agriculture Professor John Carlson was named a Fulbright Scholar to Russia last year. Malachuk will serve as a senior lecturer at the University of Heidelberg at the Heidelberg Center for American Studies. He will teach courses on romanticism and the origin of human rights, as well as one on how sustainability is portrayed in early American literature.

The attraction to teach in Germany for Malachuk centered around the Heidelberg Center for American studies.

“They have an excellent program that attracts students from around the world,” Malachuk said. “I look forward to working with their faculty and students, as well as learning more about their educational system.”

Malachuk said the University of Heidelberg wrote a letter in support of his application to be a Fulbright Scholar. Before coming to WIU’s Quad Cities campus, Malachuk was a visiting professor at American University in Washington (DC). He received his bachelor’s degree in English from Bowdoin College in Maine and his doctorate from Rutgers University in New Jersey.

The J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Program was developed by the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs of the United States Department of State. Since the program began nearly 60 years ago, more than 300,000 Fulbright Scholars have been named to study and teach in more than 150 countries.

Alumnus combines two degrees to serve his country

Western Illinois University alumnus John Siffermann ’11, is combining the two degrees he received from Western to serve the United States in its border patrol division.

Siffermann came to Western in 2011 with the intention of studying law enforcement and justice administration (LEJA) so he could follow in the footsteps of his brother and father.

“I applied to WIU mainly because of the notable LEJA program,” he said. During his sophomore year at Western, Siffermann began taking Spanish classes and took advantage of an opportunity to study abroad in Salamanca, Spain.

“Although my Spanish-speaking ability was not as fluent as others on the trip, I was able to pick it up with practice,” he said. “I thoroughly enjoyed being able to explore new cities and learn about different cultures.”

Siffermann said Assistant Professor Barry McCrary played a big role in his pursuit of a criminal justice career.

Shortly after graduating with a double major of LEJA and Spanish, Sifferman joined the U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) in February 2012. After some lengthy training, he began working at the port of entry in San Luis (AZ).

“My current position as a customs and border protection officer entails processing both pedestrian and vehicle traffic from Mexico,” he said. “The main goal of CBP is to secure our nation’s border by identifying and preventing terrorist activity, while maintaining the flow of legitimate travel and trade made into the United States of America. The Spanish training I have received through WIU (and my CBP training) has helped me accomplish these tasks more easily and safely. In fact, I speak Spanish at work more than I speak English. I owe thanks to the WIU Spanish Department, especially Dr. Cabedo-Timmons MS-Ed ’95, for laying the foundation that has helped me thus far in my career.”

Siffermann said he is grateful to Western’s LEJA program for training him for a variety of positions in law enforcement.

“I feel the smaller classroom environments helped me as a student to build a rapport with my professors,” he said. “It wasn’t until my training (for this job) that I realized how WIU prepared me to work in the criminal justice field.”

Some of Siffermann’s fondest memories of WIU are from his time traveling abroad.

“However, I thoroughly enjoyed my coursework while at WIU, as well as the intramural activities offered,” he said. “Maintaining physical fitness is not only a hobby of mine but it is a necessity to ensure officer safety and officer presence in my position. I am very fortunate to have experienced what I have over the last several years while at WIU and during my time thus far with CBP.”
MSU administrators began path at WIU

Two Michigan State University (MSU) administrators credit their time at WIU with leading to successful careers and a successful marriage.

Cliff ’71, and Sue Haka ’71, live in East Lansing (MI), where Cliff is the director of libraries for MSU, and Sue is the senior associate dean at the Eli Broad College of Business. The two met in a mathematics class at Western. Both went on to the University of Kansas, where Sue completed her doctorate degree and Cliff his MBA. As the two searched for jobs, they found the best jobs for both of them at MSU.

During the couple’s time at Western, they said they received a great foundation for their careers. “The most important lessons from my time at Western were learning to question and to think,” Cliff said. “In various history classes, a consistent theme that ‘what appears to be the case at the moment doesn’t always prove accurate once a more complete review, distanced from the passions of the moment, is undertaken.’ That lesson, gleaned from extraordinary faculty such as Professor George Hopkins, was in and of itself enough reason to have attended Western. Beyond that, Western, or more specifically philosophy professors Larry Hitterdale and Blaise Kretzschmar, dramatically enhanced my ability to think through positions and arguments. This has aided me enormously, both within and outside of my career.”

Cliff also credited Professor Gil Belles, who was his adviser, for supporting him and helping him get back on track “following my failed foray into engineering.”

“Without his assistance, I might never have had a career to speak of,” he said.

Sue said her mathematics background laid the foundation for “clear analytical thinking skills.”

“After completing a master’s degree in mathematics, I entered a Ph.D. program in accounting, with the goal of understanding the role accounting plays in society,” Sue said. “My mathematics background has been a cornerstone of my research productivity.”

Sue said some of the math department faculty also provided life lessons for students. “Professor Bishop (set theory) instilled the importance of perseverance as a means to gain a deeper understanding in your chosen discipline,” she said. “Professor Calhoun (taught analytical geometry) infused his classes with a passion for his discipline, demonstrating the importance of loving what you do. Finally, Professor Shouse (advanced calculus) told me early on at WIU that I was an ‘A student doing B work.’ That comment made me take a hard look at my efforts, encouraging me to put 100 percent into whatever I do.”

Both Cliff and Sue said their fondest memory of their time in Macomb was meeting each other and developing their early relationship. “We are true partners in life’s journey, and that journey started at WIU,” Sue said.

Cliff added that playing intramurals with the team Seal Six Packers and going to Walt’s Office and the King’s Inn are also great memories. “But meeting the love of my life tops the list,” he said. Because of their fondness for their time at WIU, the Hakas developed scholarship opportunities for students coming to WIU.

“Having been at a much larger university, where I struggled mightily and felt lost in the shuffle, Western provided a supportive environment that allowed me to succeed,” Cliff said. “So the motivation for the first scholarship, the one in history, was to try and repay both the department and the university where I ‘found myself.’ In talking with the administration, we decided upon support for those whose continuation might be impeded by finances, but that is entirely secondary. The 1960s were a tumultuous time, and I wanted to give back to the institution that provided the stability that allowed me to make my way through those difficult years.”

Sue said after coming from a small town she wanted to give back to the University for some of the transformative years of her life.

“My background is from a small town family with six children,” she said. “My parents impressed upon us, from an early age, the value of an education. Five out of six of the siblings managed to get a college education, with four degrees from Western Illinois University. Personally, my years at Western were transformational. As a simple example, a WIU art appreciation course was an eye-opener for me. With no opportunities to understand art in my small town or previous education, the presentations and discussions laid the groundwork for an ability to understand why the world values creative endeavors. I wanted those same types of learning opportunities to be available to other students, and scholarship support seemed like the best method to help make those opportunities available.”

The Hakas love to travel, recently floating through the Grand Canyon and having made trips to Scotland, Australia, Peru and China. They also enjoy the theatre, concerts, movies and sporting events.

Etta named Western’s first-ever Truman scholar finalist

This spring, Western Illinois University was honored with its first-ever finalist in the Truman Scholar competition.

Elizabeth Etta, a senior African American studies major and sociology minor from Bolingbrook (IL), is a student in Western’s Centennial Honors College.

Etta submitted her scholarship application with the help of Centennial Honors College Director Richard Hardy ’70 and Keith Boeckelman, chair of WIU’s Department of Political Science.

“The Harry S. Truman Scholarship is widely recognized as the top scholarship in the United States,” said Hardy. “The Truman looks for students who excel in academics, public service and civic leadership. Just to be nominated for a Truman is praiseworthy in its own right, but to become a finalist is a major accomplishment.”

Etta said the scholarship application required her not only to define her goals for her career, but also to develop a public policy.

“Basically, I had to figure out, in seven months, what I want to do with the rest of my life,” she said. “I am very interested in public interest law, such as public benefits law and working with national advocacy groups.”

Etta wrote her policy statement about the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) program within the Department of Human Services. Her policy revolved around a proposed program that would allow TANF recipients to replace time spent working with time spent in a classroom to fulfill the program requirements.

Etta estimates the cost of the program at $7.9 billion per state, and its implementation would require a partnership with community colleges.

Boeckelman said he was pleased to learn Etta had become the first WIU student to reach the final round of the Truman Scholarship competition.

“Besides the financial award for winning, which is substantial, it is very prestigious,” he said. “They choose individuals who serve the public, the people who can do the most.”

Etta took part in the interview portion of the competition March 25 in Chicago. There were 11 other Truman Scholar finalists interviewing during the same session.

For this year’s Harry S. Truman Scholarship Foundation, 629 applications were received from 293 colleges and universities. From those applicants, 199 students from 136 colleges were chosen as finalists.

Etta said after she graduates from Western, she plans to move on to law school. In addition to Etta, three more WIU students were invited by the University to submit applications to the 2013 Truman Scholar competition. Those students included Caleb Markey from Macomb (IL), a senior finance major; Steve Walland from Macomb (IL), a senior chemistry, pre-law major and Michael Quigley from Camp Point (IL), a senior political science major. Markey is president of WIU’s Student Government Association; Walland is a Macomb alderman; and Quigley was named the 108th Sustainment Brigade’s Soldier of the Year in August 2012.

Leatherneck baseball reaches winning milestone

Western Illinois baseball used a mix of timely hitting and pitching, and took advantage of three Arkansas errors, to defeat the number one ranked Razorbacks, 7-5, during the opening weekend of the 2013 baseball season.

The win is a milestone in program history, as it is the first time a Leatherneck team has defeated a number one ranked team in the country. It is the second straight year Western defeated a ‘Top 10’ ranked team (defeated eighth-ranked Georgia last year) and surpassed the 2008 team beating then fourth-ranked Missouri and seventh-ranked Long Beach State in the same season.

The win was also the first of the year for the Leathernecks and the first in the Ryan Brownlee coaching era.

“What a great win for our program. I’m extremely proud of our guys because we actually showed up today and expected to win, and that is something we hadn’t done the previous two games,” said Brownlee. “This is a great day for our program; it was a complete team effort today. Our pitchers did a great job; our defense was awesome; and our situational hitting was there today when it wasn’t the last two days.”

The Leathernecks recorded nine hits in the game. Brent Turner (Bloomington, IL) and Jameson Henning (Janesville, WI) finished with two hits each in the contest. Sophomore Mason Pingel (Appleton, WI) (1-0) got the victory for Western. The righty went five innings, allowing three runs while striking out a career high five Razorbacks.

Brian Loconsole (Geneva, IL) picked up the save for the Leathernecks, throwing the final 1 2/3 innings giving up no hits or runs.

Ceola Clark, Katie Condon—Scholar-Athletes of the Year

Western Illinois Athletics honored two student-athletes for their athletic and academic performance during the third annual Academic Excellence Award Banquet.

Men’s basketball player Ceola Clark III ’11 (Waukegan, IL/Warren Township) was named the Male Scholar-Athlete of the Year, and women’s soccer Katie Condon (Plainfield, IL/Joliet Catholic) received the Female Scholar-Athlete of the Year award.

Sixty-one student-athletes were honored at the banquet. Student-athletes with a cumulative 3.5 or higher grade point average were invited to the banquet.

Clark guided the Leathernecks to their best finish in the program’s NCAA Division I history (22-9 overall) and the first-ever true Summit League regular season title. As a part of the Leatherneck family for six years, Clark helped Western to its only two postseason appearances in its Division I era (back-to-back appearances in the College Basketball Invitational).

The only player to win the Summit League’s Defensive Player of the Year award twice, Clark is a two-time All-Summit League First Team selection, and once named All-Summit League Second Team. He also set several program records throughout his career. Clark also joined an elite group last year when he scored his 1,000th career point. He received his bachelor’s degree in finance with a minor in marketing and is currently pursuing a master’s degree in sport management with a 3.0 cumulative GPA.

Condon played a key role in her team making one of the biggest improvements in the win column from one year to the next. The four-year starter helped the women’s soccer team accomplish a record of 13-6, contend for a Summit League regular season title and reach the Summit League Tournament, following a season in which the team won just one conference match. She was named to the First Team All-Summit League Team and garnered Summit League Academic All-League honors all four years.

One of the team captains, she recorded a team high 12 points on the season with five goals and two assists. She also helped Western set three new team match records and six team season records. She ends her career fourth in Western Illinois history in game-winning goals (5), and eighth in career goals (10). Condon is majoring in dietetics, earning a 3.497 cumulative grade point average.

Julie Gibbes named director of compliance

Jewell (Julie) Gibbes has joined Western Illinois Leatherneck Athletics as the director of compliance. Gibbes will manage the day-to-day operations of the athletics department’s compliance office.

She joins Western after spending the last academic year at the University of South Carolina (USC).

Gibbes worked with the Gamecocks Athletics Compliance department previously. She assisted with the administering of meetings with coaches, student-athletes and administrators at USC, along with educational meetings with high school academic counselors, bowl preparation and travel administration with the football team last January, monitoring the amateurism status of student-athletes and monitoring awards and benefits.

She also worked with official visits, updating and archiving the rule interpretations database for coaches, guest ticketing for student-athletes during home contests, audits of sport camps and monitoring the employment, housing and vehicles of student-athletes.

“I’m very excited to join a great institution and athletics department such as Western Illinois University. The staff and coaches are great, and I look forward to working with the last,” said Gibbes.

No stranger to the Summit League, Gibbes worked two years at South Dakota State University (SDSU) as the graduate assistant coach for equestrian. In addition to her coaching duties, Gibbes worked on the initial eligibility and recruitment of student-athletes, academic progress, coordinated team travel, supervised student employees, assisted with budget and purchases and organized and managed the competition. She also volunteered in the Jackrabbits Athletic Development office.

“I’m very excited to join a great institution and athletics department.

- JULIE GIBBES

While attending Auburn, Gibbes was a member of the Tigers’ 2006 National Championship equestrian team, going 17-1 during competitions. She ranked third nationally in reining the following season, and was a member of the SEC Academic Honor Roll.

She received her bachelor’s degree from Auburn in exercise science and health promotion. Last year, Gibbes earned her master’s degree from SDSU in sport and recreation studies.

A look back at the 2012-13 Western Illinois men’s basketball season

This year, the Fighting Leatherneck men’s basketball team had its most historic season in its NCAA Division I history. Take a look at some highlights from the season.

The Western Illinois men’s basketball team concluded its historic season with its second straight appearance in the College Basketball Invitational, playing at Purdue. Although the Fighting Leathernecks did not reach their ultimate goal of advancing to the program’s first-ever NCAA Tournament appearance, the Leathernecks still made program history by winning their first-ever true Summit League regular season championship, and earning 22 wins, the most ever in the program’s NCAA Division I history. The Leathernecks also concluded the 2012-13 season with an RPI of 137 after being ranked 163rd to begin the season.

Western finished the season ranked among the top 100 nationally, in eight different statistical categories. The Leathernecks ranked first in personal fouls per game, having committed only 12.6 per game, and second in scoring defense, having allowed only 53.6 points per game. Western also ranked 12th in three-point field goal percentage, having connected on 39.1 percent of their attempts. Other notable team rankings: 33rd in field goal percentage (46.6), 35th in turnovers per game (11.4), 46nd in field goal percentage defense (40.0), 47th in win-loss percentage (71.0), 74th in scoring margin (5.9), 102nd in blocks per game (4.0) and 108th in assist/turnover ratio (1.05).

Individually, Terell Parks ’13 (Beloit, WI) ranked in the top 45 of four national categories. Parks was 22nd in field goal percentage (56.9), 25th in blocks per game (2.5), 26th in rebounds per game (9.6) and 42nd in double doubles (11). Ceola Clark III ’11 (Waukegan, IL) ranked 47th in assist/turnover ratio (2.21) and 78th in steals per game (1.87).

Western Illinois head coach Jim Molinari was named the 2013 National Association of Basketball Coaches (NABC) All-District coach for District 12. The honor, which is selected by other college basketball coaches, is the second of coach Molinari’s career. Molinari earned All-District coaching honors for District 11 while at Northern Illinois in 1991. No other Western Illinois coach has earned the honor. Molinari was also named a finalist for the 2013 Hugh Durham Award, given annually to the nation’s top mid-major coach.

In addition, Molinari was also tabbed The Summit League’s “Coach of the Year” by the league, CollegeInsider.com and College Sports Madness.

Park was also honored by the National Association of Basketball Coaches (NABC) as an All-District 12 Second Team member after helping lead the Leathernecks to their best season as a NCAA Division I program.

The Leathernecks had four members of the team earn five Summit League awards. Parks was named the league’s “Defensive Player of the Year,” also being named to the All-Summit League First Team. Ceola Clark III was also named to the All-Summit League First Team and Adam Link (Elbert, CO) was named to the All-Newcomer Team.

On top of all of the national rankings and recognition, the 2012-13 team also earned the most victories, 22, in the program’s NCAA Division I history. Western’s (13-3) conference mark also tied the Leathernecks’ record for Summit League wins in a season, and their 12-2 home record sits second in Western’s Division I era.

As a part of the team’s 22-win season, the Leathernecks were able to put together 11 consecutive wins, a winning streak that started with a victory on Nov. 29 at South Dakota and ended at home versus South Dakota State on Jan. 17. The Leathernecks had never earned 11 or more straight wins in a season during their Division I history, and the last time they did so in the program’s history was during the 1957-58 season when they put together 27 consecutive wins. During the streak, the Leathernecks finished the month of December with a 6-0 record. It was the first time Western finished the month of December undefeated in its Division I history.

Due to the team’s success, Western Hall had its best attendance since 1987 when it played host to South Dakota on March 2, as 5,089 fans packed the Leathernecks’ home court when they clinched a share of the The Summit League regular season title. Western had two other games with more than 4,000 fans. First when they played host to South Dakota State on Jan. 17 (4,163), and then when Cleveland State visited Western Hall on Feb. 23 (4,259). Western also had 3,973 fans pack Western Hall on Jan. 19 versus North Dakota State. The 2012-13 season averaged 2,454 fans per game, which ranks eighth in the program’s NCAA Division I era, and is the best average since the 1998-99 season.

Nate Davis and Emily Brink earn All-Tournament Team Honors

The Western Illinois men’s and women’s golf teams competed in the 2013 Summit League Championships in April, and each team had a golfer earn all-tournament team honors.

For the men’s team, sophomore Nate Davis finished fourth individually after carding a 221 (71-74-76). The QuinCY (IL) native kicked-off the meet with a 71 in the opening round before carding a 74 and 76 in rounds two and three (+5). The sophomore had three eagles, six birdies and 31 pars throughout the championship.

On the women’s side, senior Emily Brink finished fifth with a three-round score of 239 (86-78-75). The Quincy (IL) native put together the team’s best round of the tournament in the final round, a 75, moving her up into a fifth-place finish. Brink had two birdies and 29 pars in the tournament.

As teams, the men finished in fourth and the women placed fifth.

WIU graduate lands lead in Evian commercial

Western Illinois University alumnus Micah Spayer ’09, is getting in touch with his inner child while starring in a recent commercial for Evian water.

Spayer, who holds a BFA degree in musical theatre and now lives in New York (NY), plays the lead in the commercial. He is shown walking down a sidewalk catching his reflection in several mirrors, only to see the reflection of a baby’s face looking back at him.

The commercial, released on April 21, can be seen on television or via YouTube at youtube.com/user/evianbabies/babyandme.

Initially Spayer auditioned for the part of a mustached cyclist in the commercial, but after the audition he was recast in the lead. He said the audition included dancing and pretending to look in a mirror and seeing a baby looking back.

“The commercial was filmed in late January in Buenos Aires,” Spayer said. “We were there for eight days, but before then, we rehearsed with well-known choreographer Michael Rooney for four days.

Spayer said it was the encouragement he received from his professors at WIU that pushed him in the right career direction.

“That’s the beauty of the professors at WIU; they leave a lot of it up to the students. ”

Henson is one of first QC communication graduates and Thompson Scholar

Leah Henson ’13 graduated in May 2013 like many other WIU students. But that’s where the similarity ends. Henson doesn’t know the meaning of downtime. Not only is she one of the first two graduates with a bachelor of arts in communication from the WIU Quad Cities (WIU-QC) campus, she was also a founding member and the first president of the Communication Student Society (CSS) at WIU-QC, and she was the Spring 2013 Department of Communication Undergraduate Thompson Scholar. Did we mention she did all this while she worked part-time as a sales associate at Victoria’s Secret?

Along with Cayla Freeman ’13 (Moline, IL), Henson graduated with a bachelor of arts in communication and double minors in sociology and psychology. The WIU-QC communication majors complete two emphases: interpersonal communication and organizational communication. Communication became a major in the Quad Cities in Fall 2011.

Henson says she decided to attend WIU-QC because it was affordable, close to home and she felt confident that all her credits from Black Hawk College would transfer. Thanks to the Illinois Articulation Agreement, Henson, like others from area community colleges, are advised at their community college for a seamless transfer to WIU.

“I chose communication as a major for a number of reasons. I was curious about the communication discipline; a communication degree can be beneficial in many aspects of a professional life; and I knew if I went into the field of communication, I would be challenged,” she said. “I wanted to step out of my comfort zone by having to do public speaking.”

As a founding member and president of the Communication Student Society at WIU-QC, Henson got the chance to gain leadership skills by conducting meetings and planning events. During the Spring 2013 semester, CSS organized and implemented a major poverty awareness event. The CSS organizes social events, schedules professional guest speakers and provides members with resources and training to build their marketability, opportunities to professionally network and make connections with other students, faculty and alumni.

Henson received the Spring 2013 Wayne N. Thompson Undergraduate Scholar Award, a $500 award that is given in the fall and spring semesters to a declared communication major with at least 90 semester hours and an overall grade point average of 3.5 or higher.

“My fondest memories at WIU-QC are developing and maintaining close relationships with classmates and professors by engaging in class discussions and class projects,” she added.

“I had outstanding professors who helped me improve academically and professionally. Dr. Hogg has been a mentor and has helped me in every way possible. She encouraged me to become the president of CSS and also has encouraged me to take on different internships and career paths. Also, Dr. Young has helped me to improve my writing skills by giving me valuable feedback.”

After graduation, Henson plans to complete several internships, including a marketing internship and an internship with the American Red Cross. After gaining new skills and work experience, Henson plans to return to WIU to obtain a master’s degree in communication or counseling.

WIU alumnus—stage combat director

When stage combat instructor Andrea Robertson ’97 MFA ’00 stages a theatrical fight, one of her first priorities is the safety of the actors.

After earning two degrees from WIU, Robertson went on to become a certified stage-combat teacher through the Society of American Fight Directors (SAFD). Robertson is one of 88 certified teachers in the United States and one of two in the state of Arizona.

Currently, Robertson is the director of theatre at Paradise Valley Community College, in Phoenix (AZ). She also owns Fight Call, LLC, where she teaches and directs fights for theatre companies, which includes the Arizona Opera Company.

Robertson said she discovered her passion for stage combat while she attended Western.

“WIU gave me a solid foundation for my career in theatre,” she said. “Without my time there, I wouldn’t be where I am today—with a job I love and a passion for stage combat.”

Robertson said she has many great memories of her time at Western and living on campus.

“Some of my fondest memories are living in Thompson Hall and eating up on the 18th floor, finding a huge turtle next to Lake Ruth, walking across campus to the Dairy Queen for ice cream and all the theatre shows in Simpkins Hall, and the other two mainstage theatres,” she said. “I have so many good memories—hanging out in Browne Hall between classes, singing in the choir and all my theatre classes.”

Robertson said she credits her directing mentor, Egla Hassan ’82, and her first stage combat teacher, Paul Dennhardt ’87, with helping foster her career path, as well as theatre faculty members Gene Kozlowski ’67 M.A. ’68, David Patrick, Mim Canny, Sonny Bell and Ray Gabica.

Grice Scholarship legacy

By Julie Murphy ’94 M.S. ’95

A conversation with George Grice M.A. ’71, alumnus, benefactor, author, farmer and retired professor, always returns to three common themes: family, teaching and learning, and Western Illinois University.

“Mine is a family of educators, and we have a tradition with Western,” said Grice. “My parents, my two sisters, my aunt, my uncle and grandmother all earned education degrees at Western and were teachers at heart. We were farmers, but both my parents taught school, and the importance of education guided our lives.”

Grice grew up with his family on their farm, White Gate, near London Mills (IL). His parents, Wrenn ‘38 and Evelyn ‘38, each spent more than 20 years teaching. Grice’s sisters, Leanne ’74 and Carol ’65, both followed their parents to Western and earned degrees in education. Grice went away for his undergraduate studies, then returned to Western to complete his master’s degree in communication in 1971. He went on to teach in higher education—Trinity University, Sam Houston State University, Auburn University at Montgomery and Radford University, from which he retired in 2008.

His research interests include instructional communication, public address, and business and professional communication. He co-authored 11 editions of three communication textbooks. “Mastering Public Speaking’ is in its 8th edition and has been adopted by more than 100 colleges and universities throughout the nation.

Another of the Grice traditions is generosity, especially toward Western. Grice established the first family scholarship, the Wrenn and Evelyn Grice Scholarship, in 1985 in honor of his parents. In 1993, the Carol Grice Major Scholarship was named for his sister, followed by the Leanne Grice Porch Scholarship in 1994 to also honor another sister. Again in 1994, he began the Jessie Ferne Routh Grice Scholarship to honor his paternal grandmother, a 1929 graduate of Western (in education, of course). Four teacher education students per year are chosen to be Grice scholars, all planning to teach at the elementary level.

This year, Grice endowed a Faculty Instructional Development Fund in the Department of Communication to fund proposals that make positive differences in classroom instruction and student learning. Projects that are extensions of classroom learning and that engage faculty and students in cooperative study are also encouraged. “I want to encourage active learning in the sphere of the classroom,” he said. “This fund is for faculty, or faculty may sponsor applications from undergraduate students and teaching assistants.”

Grice is an advocate of active learning and empowering students with a responsibility for their own learning. “To paraphrase Bel Kaufman (“Up the Down Staircase”),” he likes to say, “there’s one reason to teach: to make a permanent, positive difference in the life of a student.”

George Grice, his parents and two sisters have taught a cumulative total of 130 years. Beyond the classroom, Grice and his family legacy continue to make permanent, positive differences in the lives of Western students. The four Grice family education scholarships have for many years helped students become elementary teachers, and now the Grice Faculty Instructional Development Fund will influence classroom instruction and student learning.

“George is a rare individual who has carefully and quietly contributed for many years and has built a thoughtful and meaningful scholarship structure in his family’s names,” said Vice President for Advancement and Public Services Brad Bainter ’79 M.S. ’83. “The addition of an endowment for faculty development is just incredible. Western is made stronger through his friendship, and we are very, very grateful.”

WIU art restoration project

The Western Illinois University collection of Federal Art Project (FAP) works will be included in the exhibition “A New Deal for Illinois: The Federal Art Project of Western Illinois University,” which will be shown at the Figge Art Museum in Davenport (IA) from Sept. 14 – Jan. 5. A catalog will accompany the exhibition.

WIU’s Federal Art Project collection was formed in the 1930s when University officials commissioned works through the Public Works of Art Project, and later through the Federal Art Project of the Works Progress Administration (FAP/WPA). The FAP’s primary goals were to employ out-of-work artists and to provide art for non-federal government buildings: schools, hospitals, libraries, etc. The work was divided into art production, art instruction and art research.

WIU Art Gallery Director Ann Marie Hayes-Hawkinson said Macomb is fortunate to have this collection.

“We can thank President Morgan for having the foresight to bring art to campus through these federal programs,” she said.

Commissioned works were used to decorate classrooms, hallways and other public spaces on campus. The WIU Art Gallery is now home for these works.

Some of the works in the collection are in need of conservation. Lead by Vice President for Advancement and Public Services Brad Bainter ’79 M.S. ’83, the University and private citizens have responded to a call for conservation. The exhibition and the conservation initiative represent Western’s dedicated efforts to preserve and promote knowledge of the important historical legacy of New Deal art.

“The WIU Federal Art Project Collection is a significant resource, which includes a large number of prominent American artists from the 1930s and 1940s. The collection is a microcosm of the diverse themes and modernist styles produced in the Federal Art Project, which is usually associated with traditional realism and regionalist subjects,” said exhibition Curator Gregory Gilbert, who teaches art history at Knox College in Galesburg (IL).

The exhibition highlights the government policies during the New Deal era. Gilbert noted, “A large number of women, African-Americans and artists from other minority groups, were given an opportunity to pursue professional careers, giving them a sense of equality and cultural inclusion in American society.”

Collection highlights include works by Archibald J. Motley Jr., Gertrude Abercrombie, Romolo Roberti and Aaron Bohrod.

The WIU collection also includes portraits by J. Theodore Johnson of President Walter P. Morgan and Samuel B. Hursh, Western’s first teacher of English literature and grammar.

“Showing our Federal Art Project collection at the Figge is a fantastic opportunity for the University,” said Hayes-Hawkinson.

The WIU exhibition is a companion exhibition to “1934: A New Deal for Artists,” an exhibition featuring similar works organized by the Smithsonian American Art Museum.

“A lot of people will go to the Figge to see the Smithsonian works and will see the Western collection while they are there,” she added.

WIU’s FAP collection will return to Macomb in January, 2014, and the exhibition will be shown at the WIU Art Gallery from Jan. 18 - March 1.

“We are pleased to see this important collection of the University Art Gallery restored and shared,” said Bainter. “We thank the sponsors for recognizing the value of these works to the institution and to the public, and for covering the cost of restoration.”

Sponsored works are currently at The Conservation Center in Chicago. To help visitors to the exhibition understand what art restoration entails, Hayes-Hawkinson and a University Television crew will visit Chicago to interview conservators. The program will be an educational component in both exhibitions.

“The Federal Art Project Collection works were created more than 80 years ago. We are excited to see how these works will look after restoration.” Hayes-Hawkinson said, “By being a good steward of our collection, we are making sure future generations will be able to enjoy them.”

An alumni and friends social will be held Oct. 10 at the Figge Art Museum from 6-8 p.m. in conjunction with the exhibition. For more information about the event or to register, call (309) 298-1914 or visit wiu.com/alumni.

Symposium on 17th Century manuscript

Western Illinois University Libraries and the School of Music recently hosted a symposium on Restoration Cathedral Music, which included international speakers and a performance by the University Singers. The audience came from surrounding states to discuss topics such as religion, politics and culture during England’s tumultuous 17th Century.

The feature of this event was the story behind its inception. In 2010, the WIU School of Music received an anonymous donation of a bound manuscript containing English church music. Upon further research, it was determined to have been written in the hand of William Turner (1651-1740), one of the most regarded composers of the Restoration period (1660-1710).

“Once we confirmed the author of the manuscript, I was determined to bring life to this music once again,” said Rod Sharpe, music librarian. Sharpe transcribed the music into modern musical notations so it could be played. He then contacted James Stegall, director of the University Singers, to see if they would be willing to perform the music during the symposium.

“This was a wonderful opportunity for the University Singers to perform a historical piece,” Stegall said. “The students practiced for weeks and were excited to perform something that may not have been heard in centuries.”

“I was thrilled to hear the University Singers perform,” Sharpe said. “It was truly an honor to host such a unique event at Western.”

University Libraries’ “180” on channel 3

Throughout the year, University Libraries hosts numerous discussions on current affairs and scholarly research over the noon hour in the Leslie F. Malpass Library, room 180. Bill Thompson and Tammy Sayles, reference librarians, coordinate the programming for these discussions.

“What better place to discuss current issues and research than in the library?” said Thompson. “We have experts on campus who can add perspective to an issue beyond what we see and hear in the news.”

Beginning this summer, these discussions will be available to a broader audience. In partnership with University Television (UTV), Thompson is moderating a new cable show, “180,” which will be broadcast on WIU-TV Channel 3.

“I am excited for the opportunity to broaden our audience,” Thompson added. “Those who are interested in the topic, but can’t get away for the noon hour, will be able to tune into “180” at a later time.”

The idea for “180” came from UTV Associate Director Roger Kent M.S. ’01.

“We are constantly looking to expand and diversify our programming at UTV,” said Kent. “In the past, we have tried to tape the discussions hosted by University Libraries. Bringing the presenters into the studio and having Dr. Thompson moderate the discussion seemed like a natural fit for a new show.”

The series began taping on subjects such as the sequester and Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA), both of which had been discussions held in the Malpass Library during the Spring 2013 semester. Anyone outside of the WIU-TV Channel 3 viewing area can view the broadcast stream at wiu.edu/vpaps/utv/streaming_video.php.

University Libraries welcomes new employees

University Libraries welcomes three new employees, Jason Kubis ’08, Daneen Richardson and Beverly Trusley ’89.

Kubis joined the staff as a microcomputer support specialist in the Computer Services Unit. He provides computer support for the library and patrons.

“I am enjoying the challenges that come with supporting the technology needs of the library community,” Kubis said.

Richardson, the health sciences/ sciences librarian, joined the library faculty in October. She has a background in health sciences and has been working with the School of Nursing to update and expand resources.

“As the School of Nursing expands, I am looking forward to working with the faculty and students to meet their research needs,” she said.

Trusley, a library assistant, has joined the Access Services Unit.

“I come from a long line of Western Illinois University graduates. I am thrilled to come back and work at the institution my family has attended for generations,” Trusley said.

Library Atrium Society

The Library Atrium Society was created to support the Western Illinois University Libraries’ collections and services through established funds and endowments. The money generated through memberships support University Libraries’ efforts to expand educational resources for students, faculty and the general public.

“Library Atrium Society members provide essential financial support to better University Libraries—financial support that the budget cannot fund, but that is essential to our mission,” Michael Jones ’12, director of development for University Libraries, said.

“In the past two years, funds from the Library Atrium Society have been used to purchase 31 computers for the Malpass Library classroom, 10 iPads for the Curriculum Library and potting soil for the 2,000 plants in Malpass Library,” Jones added. “In addition, this fund supports an annual $1,000 Study Abroad Library Student Assistant Scholarship and numerous events, including the recent Music Library’s Restoration Cathedral Music Symposium.”

Donors can give at any of the four Atrium Society levels, which include Seedling ($1-$249), Nutrurer ($250-$499), Cultivator ($500-$999) and Gardener ($1,000 and above), and enjoy new membership benefits, including bookmarks, a subscription to the University Libraries e-newsletter Inner Scoop, books and advanced notice of events. Gardener level donors will also have an atrium plant named in their honor and be recognized at a special ceremony.

“As everyone knows, these are difficult economic times, and our budget has been shrinking,” said Jones. “Donor support is more crucial than ever, and we have several needs going forward, including capital facility projects, technology upgrades, scholarships, equipment upgrades and event support. Tangible items like laptops, furniture, printers and even planters and stands for our plants are much needed. Atrium Society members help us improve resources for our patrons.”

For more information on the Library Atrium Society, visit wiu.edu/libraries/administration/development/atrumsoiety.php. Anyone interested in making a donation may contact Jones at (309) 298-2356 or M-Jones2@wiu.edu.
On 50 Years at Horn Field Campus: A Great Place to Celebrate Being Alive

By Teresa Koltzenburg ‘92 M.S. ’11

South of Macomb, tucked away from the urban trappings and corn-field landscapes of the hometown of Western Illinois University, is the University’s Horn Field Campus (HFC). Those who did not study recreation, park and tourism administration (RPTA), the department at WIU that administers the 92-acre tract, may have recollections of HFC via its Horn Lodge—where many groups and individuals have gathered for professional and social events over the years—or perhaps from a team-building course there.

In 2015, Horn Field Campus will celebrate 50 years, during which time it has served innumerable individuals as a place for learning and recreation.

Since 1971, when RPTA Professor Emeritus Frank Lupton first envisioned the 92-acre haven as an ideal location for the outdoor educational purpose of instructing his RPTA students, Horn Field Campus has continued to evolve. The large campus provides many amenities, including woodlands, prairie, nature trails, as well as a challenge course that features a high ropes course and a 40-foot climbing/rappelling wall for WIU faculty, students, alumni and community members.

According to “First Century: A Pictorial History of Western Illinois University,” by WIU Distinguished Professor Emeritus John Hallwas ’67 M.A. ’68, the tract of land on which Horn Field Campus sits came to be a part of WIU in the mid-1960s, but the buildings located there were built in the early part of the 20th century.

“(Frank J.) Horn, who owned Coca-Cola Bottling companies in Macomb and other towns, bought the property in 1946. The tract was appraised at $96,200 when Western bought it. The state paid $56,000, and the other $40,200 represented a gift to the University,” Hallwas wrote. “The property included a brick lodge and three brick cabins, which had been built in the 1930s by the former owner, William Bacon.”

Lupton, who retired from Western in 1993, said his vision to use Horn Field Campus as a premier outdoor educational facility started even before he took the faculty position in the RPTA department.

“I would say my vision for it probably started when I interviewed for the position, back in 1971. I liked Western, and I very much liked the field campus,” Lupton said. “I had visions of it becoming like some other outdoor educational facilities I was acquainted with around the country. It is such a great resource—an outdoor center, where a variety of groups can come to learn and enjoy—and serves a lot of purposes.”

In a recent email sent to current Horn Field Campus Program Coordinator Mindy Pheiffer ’91 M.S. ’92, Lupton closed his message with what many may remember as his signature saying: “The sun is shining and the birds are singing; it’s a great day to be alive!” He also expressed his delight to Pheiffer about how the facility is being utilized for educational purposes for the entire campus community.

Pheiffer, who started as the Horn Field Campus program coordinator in 2005, said the uses and programs at Horn Field Campus have grown every decade since it became a part of WIU in the 1960s.

“In an interview conversation I had with [WIU] Professor Emeritus Maurice Kellogg ’48 MS-Ed ’56, I learned he started teaching at Western in 1958 and used the field campus in the ’60s for science education. Then in the ’70s, Frank Lupton started the evolution of the outdoor field campus for outdoor education. This is when the trails were built, the native prairie was restored, and when the teams course began,” Pheiffer explained. “I was first introduced to Horn Field Campus during my undergrad years in the late ’80s when I discovered RPTA. I joined the master’s program in the early ’90s, as I fell in love with the entire concept of outdoor education, and Horn Field Campus was my Utopia. Being outdoors surrounded by nature is where I think we all need to be at some time or another. Then add to that the concept of human growth and development, which the challenge course activities provide. We don’t often talk about values in the classroom, but the activities at Horn Field Campus embody and extend value-driven concepts to all who participate.”

Pheiffer noted she will continue to tell the story of Horn Field Campus and promote its value. She is developing future plans that include upgrades to the building facilities on the campus.

“The lodge is a focal point of Horn Field Campus and conjures up memories for many people. We want Horn Lodge to retain its rustic feel. It is a place for people to gather, converse and promote collegiality,” Pheiffer said. “Our biggest constraint for growth is deferred maintenance.”

Horn Field Campus is home to the Environmental Conservation and Outdoor Education Expedition (ECOEE) program, a semester-long field studies program, which was started by Lupton in 1976. Jeff Tindall M.S. ’90, an instructor in the RPTA department and the leader of ECOEE, noted the lack of storage facilities and proper educational facilities require the faculty and students to engage in a lot of “work-arounds.”

Lupton, Tindall and Pheiffer all agree that updated, larger facilities could help take Horn Field Campus to the next level.

“I think it would be wonderful to build additional facilities so they could have some larger kind of events, which would attract people from across the country. It has that kind of potential,” Lupton noted.

“More programming could take place and larger crowds could be accommodated for classes and banquets,” Tindall said. “Storage of gear and outfitting for courses would be much more efficient, too. Currently, gear is stored in shared space in Horrabin Hall. Canoes and kayaks have to be moved to have access to the rooms in which the gear is stored, and often gear has to be moved in order to get to other gear. In general, outfitting for a course can be problematic because of the shared space.”

Pheiffer noted her students and her RPTA colleagues continue to help make the buildings at Horn Field Campus work even in the face of having to use outdated facilities.

“The lodge is currently used for RPTA classes, Wilderness First Responder Certification courses, as well as by several academic units at WIU and Spoon River College. We also accommodate many types of conferences, workshops, meetings and social gatherings—and not only for WIU groups, but also community groups, churches, Macomb Youth Leadership, several scout groups and service organizations,” she explained. “This is the only facility and academic program of its kind in the nation; RPTA was recently designated as one of WIU’s ‘signature’ programs, and the challenge course is the only facility of its kind

WIU dietetics student receives $5,000 Food Safety Scholarship

By Teresa Koltzenburg ’92 M.S. ’11

It was a busy end of the Spring 2013 semester for Western Illinois University dietetics major Deidra Carter. Although it’s a challenging time of year for most students, for Carter, a junior from Chicago, in addition to attending to her regular coursework load, she was working on a detailed food-safety program. In early March, Carter learned she was selected to receive an Academy of Nutrition and Dietetics Foundation/ConAgra Foods Food Safety Student Challenge Scholarship. And so began Carter’s flurry of work to finish her regular end-of-the-semester college coursework assignments and projects, as well as develop, plan, implement, record and submit her food-safety program for the challenge award.

After applying and achieving selection this past spring, to earn the $5,000 scholarship, Carter had to develop a program that incorporated the Home Food Safety organization’s four key messages: wash hands often; keep raw meat and ready-to-eat food separate; cook to proper temperatures; and refrigerate promptly. She said faculty in the dietetics, fashion merchandising and hospitality (DFMH) department were key in helping her develop and publicize her food safety program, which she designed as a cooking class for 10 individuals considered to be part of an at-risk population for food-borne illness.

“My goal was to teach food safety, and I wanted to model my instruction after the food safety we learned in the courses we take as dietetics majors. I decided to focus on students who are currently living in the residence halls but then will be moving into apartments next semester,” Carter explained. “When you never have had to cook for yourself, there are a lot of things about food safety you may not know. For example, you should not mix raw meat together with produce on the same cutting board when you’re preparing food. The cooking class was an interactive way for them to learn about this, as well as other food safety preparation tips.”

According to the Food Safety Student Challenge Scholarship requirements, students selected were required to execute the program as described in the student’s application; incorporate the Home Food Safety organization’s four key messages; use and promote resources available at homefoodsafety.org; and provide a progress report and a final report by June 15 (with a written narrative, as well as with either photos or video that will be highlighted on the organization’s website).

Carter, who was serving as a resident assistant in Olson Hall in 2012-13, said she was able to recruit from her floor for program participants, noting the food safety program she developed also helped fulfill her resident assistant program development duties.

She held her food safety class in the kitchen lab in Knoblauch Hall, and the 10 participants were divided into groups of two and partnered with a junior or a senior dietetics student. According to Carter, Lorri Kanauss ’94 MS-Ed ’97, associate professor in the DFMH department, was key in helping her implement the class.

“Dr. Kanauss helped me recruit other dietetics students to help supervise the different stations in my cooking class,” Carter explained. “The faculty members were so awesome. They helped me a great deal when I was really stressed out about this project. For me, it wasn’t the issue of getting the work done, I was just very timid about having to lead a cooking class and market it myself, because I don’t see myself as very good at marketing. Dr. Carol Longley [assistant professor in the DFMH department] also helped me with the publicity for the program. They were all very encouraging.”

Within at least a 100-mile radius. To be able to serve more current students and potential students with upgraded, expanded facilities makes sense.”

Recognizing the need for an outdoor education building has set Pheiffer into action. With the assistance of the HFC Advisory Board, many years have been devoted to creating a master plan and drawing physical plans for a building.

“The dream of the committee, the faculty and everyone involved at HFC is to have a state-of-the-art facility equipped with the basics of restrooms, showers, laundry and food-prep area, along with a staging facility for experiential trips and classrooms.”

On the precipice of its golden anniversary, HFC has received a bit of upgrade to its woodlands. Thanks to a grant from the Arbor Day Foundation, written by RPTA Assistant Professor Rob Porter and David King, executive director of Prairie Hills Resource Conservation and Development, Inc., the campus is becoming a model for western Illinois reforestation initiatives. The award will help facilitate its ongoing strategic plan: to continue to work toward making HFC’s forest and prairie areas ecologically healthy, recreationally safe and aesthetically pleasing. Around Arbor Day this past April, Pheiffer, Porter, King, RPTA students, as well as a number of volunteers, planted 8,000 saplings, which were purchased with the grant’s funds.

Pheiffer said she is looking forward to the next adventure for HFC when, in 2015, it celebrates its 50th anniversary of being part of WIU. She noted she welcomes involvement from faculty, students, alumni and friends of HFC in planning the celebration.

For more information about ways you can get involved, contact Pheiffer at (309) 833-5798, MJ-Pheiffer@wiu.edu or the RPTA office at (309) 298-1967.

Bonnie Henrickson M.S. ’86 is self-admitted Diet Mountain Dew addict. While the caffeinated concoction certainly has helped fuel the Western Illinois University graduate’s interminable drive, her background—she grew up in Minnesota and said of her upbringing, “My parents are both hard-working, blue-collar types who have the mentality, ‘Find a way to get it done, and they instilled that in us.”—and her passion for women’s basketball have been key to her collegiate-level career success.

In March, Henrickson’s team, the University of Kansas Women’s Basketball Jayhawks, made its second appearance in as many years in the National Collegiate Athletic Association’s Sweet Sixteen. According to Henrickson, who owns a total of 20 years of coaching experience, has helped guide teams to postseason play 14 times or eight, will be gathering at the Friday Night Party to begin to reunite. Some classes will be represented on floats in the Heritage Days Parade, which starts at 10 a.m. Saturday, June 29, and then will celebrate their class reunions Saturday evening.

“We’re hoping, too, to have a tour of Simpkins Hall at 1 p.m. Saturday (June 29), and those who are interested, can just show up at the front door,” he noted. “Because of Heritage Days—when Macomb celebrates its founding—there are lots of other activities for the whole family.”

According to Knowles, it is likely the 2014 Heritage Days festival will be moved to the third weekend in June in order to avoid conflicting with Railroad Days in Galesburg. To accommodate this, Heritage Days and the Western High/Academy All-School Party will be held the weekend of June 19-22, 2014.

“Please consider joining the ‘Western High, Macomb, IL’ group on Facebook, as there are lots of interesting discussions, reunions and remembrances occurring there,” Knowles added.

For more information, contact Knowles at JKNOWLES@davisrothwell.com.

The 13th Annual Western High/Academy All-School Party is slated for Friday, June 28 in Macomb on the second floor of the Ritz in downtown Macomb. According to John Knowles—who graduated from Western High in 1968 and from Western Illinois University in 1976—hundreds of graduates and some teachers attend each year.

“We will probably charge a $5 admission fee, as we have to pay rent for use of the Ritz (we have exclusive use of the entire second floor). The amount we collect over the cost of rent will again be applied to the Western High Scholarship Fund,” Knowles explained in a recent email to Western High alumni and former faculty.

This year, according to Christie Carmack ’10, M.S.

‘12—who graduated from Western High in 1973—marks the 40th anniversary of the closing of Western High at WIU.

Alumni celebrating the reunions of their specific classes, which include class years ending in the numerals three or eight, will be gathering at the Friday Night Party to begin to reunite. Some classes will be represented on floats in the Heritage Days Parade, which starts at 10 a.m. Saturday, June 29, and then will celebrate their class reunions Saturday evening.

“We’re hoping, too, to have a tour of Simpkins Hall at 1 p.m. Saturday (June 29), and those who are interested, can just show up at the front door,” he noted. “Because of more culturally responsive classrooms by recognizing and fostering the diversity of all students, staff and families.

Beck, who describes his philosophy as one that encompasses “respect for all,” is a presenter in the educational community and helps schools address LGBT and multicultural issues. Since earning his master’s degree in school counseling, he has presented in several educational courses that address creating safe and affirming school climates. Since 2010, Beck has worked with graduate level students in group counseling settings and served as a substitute instructor for faculty in the WIU Department of Counselor Education.

“I learned about the school counseling program available at Western from Dr. Holly Nikels, and as a student there, the faculty taught me to epitomize the strength that you do not give up and retreat when setbacks arise, especially when it goes against what is ethical. My philosophy has been fostered by my professional training, mentorship and advocacy that I learned at Western,” he said. “Professional school counselors serve as agents of change in schools by creating comprehensive and developmental programs that teach children it is okay to be different, that families come in all shapes and sizes and that respect for others is the common goal we can all share and strive for. The professional mentorship provided to me by Dr. Nikels prepared me to design school counseling programs in which every child can learn to their fullest potential.”

According to Nikels, Beck’s commitment to his students and his profession are apparent in all he does.

“On behalf of WIU’s counselor education department, I want to congratulate Matt on this well-deserved honor. He consistently uses what is best for children as his compass in developing and implementing prevention programming and interventions for his students. Matt is a respected counseling professional, an honorable WIU alumnus and a cherished colleague. We are proud to have been a part of his journey,” Nikels said.

Beck added that Erie’s motto—which is “Where Children Come First”—has served as his motivation and kept him focused and grounded in creating welcoming classrooms for all over the last year.

“Erie educators have partnered with me in advocating for positive, respectful and inclusive programs,” Beck said. “For my students, I just want them to remember to keep celebrating who they are.”

WIU moves into grade schools

What do sixth grade students at Edison School in Macomb have in common with sixth graders at King Elementary in Vancouver (WA) and kindergartners at Riverton (IL) Elementary? Western Illinois University is “their” school.

As part of an “adopt-a-classroom” initiative, the University Bookstore, in conjunction with University Housing and Dining Services, have adopted the Edison class, taught by Marcy Lantz, and the King Elementary class, taught by Pam Dickey ’94 (who, in addition to being an alumnus, has another Western connection—Courier Adviser and Journalism Professor Rich Moreno is Dickey’s brother), while the WIU Foundation has adopted the Riverton class, taught by WIU teacher education alumna Liz Watkins ’10.

The Macomb students recently hopped on a Go West bus and visited campus, where they were treated to lunch at the new Corbin-Olson dining center, a Skype session with their Washington “sister” school and a tour of campus. In January, the class was outfitted in Think Purple t-shirts, and in March, they had the opportunity to wear those shirts and watch the Leathernecks men’s basketball team win the league championship in Western Hall. The Washington students have received Think Purple/WIU gear and classroom decor as well, and keep in touch with their school via email and Skype. One step into Watkins’ kindergarten class shows the classroom’s Leatherneck spirit.

“The point of the ‘adopt-a-classroom’ program is really two-fold: it creates a buzz in their school for the program and for Western, and it creates a feeling within our local schools specifically that Western Illinois University is their university,” said University Bookstore (and Go West) Director Jude Kiah.

“We hope that by planting these positive seeds within our local schools, we will reap the rewards as they continue their education.”

Julie Murphy ’94 M.S. ’95, director of Foundation Communications and Donor Stewardship, echoed Kiah’s sentiments: programs such as this foster not only recognition for Western Illinois University, but for higher education in general.

“These ‘adopt-a-classroom’ programs show the students that there is a college or university there for them when it’s time to select a school,” Murphy added. “They’ve made that connection early, and when they begin looking at schools, they will remember their Western connection. And the fact that our Riverton classroom is led by a WIU alumnus further reinforces our University’s commitment to its students and alumni.”

As a WIU alumnus, Watkins had approached her alma mater about providing some Western memorabilia for her classroom as part of her school’s program.

“Partnering with Western has given kindergarten students the awareness of college,” she said. “They are excited to wear their Western shirts every Friday and we even say a Western chant. Seeing them excited about going to college brings joy to me.”

Alumni-Admissions Initiative Update

From Director of Admissions Andy Borst...

Greetings Alumni! Thank you for all of your efforts to help tell your WIU story to prospective students and their families. As we continue to tell the WIU story, I have some excellent news to share about this fall’s class of new students. Please see p. 1 for all of the details.

As high school seniors pick their future colleges and as juniors begin their college search, thank you for sharing your Western story with students and parents. Please say with pride that good things are happening at WIU and be proud to be a Leatherneck alumnus.

Prior to b&a, Kolodzey held executive positions from 1980-1991 at a number of leading advertising agencies including D’Arcy MacManus & Masius, Bayer Bess Vanderwarker and J. Walter Thompson USA, directing campaigns in the food, personal care and entertainment industries.

Kolodzey has also been active with numerous civic and philanthropic organizations over her 33-year career, serving on boards and advisory committees for Chicago Public Schools Adopt-a-School Program, CRIS Radio, YWCA and the Women’s HIV Program at Northwestern Memorial Hospital. She has committed significant time and resources to the environment, earning certification as a Master Gardener from the University of Illinois, serving as an adviser for Chicago River initiatives, and volunteering at the Chicago Botanic Garden and the Dixon National Tallgrass Prairie Seed Bank. Kolodzey has been a generous supporter of WIU throughout the years, donating to various WIU programs and providing guidance to WIU Marketing. Most recently, she has established a scholarship at WIU to help support graduates of the East Village Youth Program in Chicago who are attending Western Illinois University. Kolodzey and her husband live in Winnetka (IL). They have two children.

Garvey, an accounting graduate, is currently a senior vice president at NERA Economic Consulting and was formerly the managing director in the Disputes and Investigations practice at Navigant. Previously, he was the segment leader of Navigant’s Economics Practice for four years. Garvey was the president of Chicago Partners, which was sold to Navigant in May 2008. Garvey’s career has spanned across the largest corporations in public accounting and consulting. In the 1980s and early 1990s, he served as partner for Deloitte & Touche before branching out and creating an independent consulting business. He has also served as partner and market team leader for the business Fraud and Investigation Services unit of Arthur Andersen LLP. Garvey, a certified public accountant, has testified or directed complex litigation matters regarding fraud, merger and acquisition disputes, bankruptcy and more. He has represented numerous companies and individuals before regulatory bodies including the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Commodities Futures Trading Commission (CFTC). Garvey has appeared as an expert in Delaware Chancery Court, Bankruptcy Court, State and Federal courts and in various administrative forums and has also served as an independent arbitrator.

He received the Outstanding Alumni Award from the WIU Department of Accountancy in 2001. He and his wife, Sarah, served as the 2008 Executives in Residence in the College of Business and Technology. He serves on the board of the Boys & Girls Clubs of Chicago for 25 years, and also serves on the boards of the Catherine Cook School and the Civic Federation. He is a member of the Parents’ Leadership Council for Boston College, where his son Jack is a sophomore.

for those who demonstrate the potential to succeed.”

According to Hawkinson, with so much uncertainty surrounding higher education and with the state of Illinois’ budget situation, the new admissions standards are another example of Western’s efforts that allow students and families to better plan.

“Our admissions criteria, our scholarships and our four-year cost lock-in, and graduation guarantees are set so students and families can prepare. From the moment students step onto our campus, they will know what to expect in order to graduate,” Hawkinson added.

“Students will know if they can be admitted to WIU, and they’ll know if they qualify for Western Commitment Scholarships. Students have the peace of mind knowing that their tuition, fees and room and board will not change for four years. And depending on their majors, they’ll have a guaranteed degree plan to graduate in four years through our GradTrac program. Students come to Western Illinois University knowing they will receive a quality and affordable education at WIU.”

Western Illinois University will present the new admissions standards to high school guidance counselors at the annual Illinois Association of College Admission Counseling articulation conferences throughout the state in September.

For more information about admissions standards at WIU, contact the Office of Undergraduate Admissions at (309) 298-3100, or email admissions@wiu.edu.
