Glioblastoma Multiforme (GBM) is an aggressive brain tumor that took my father’s life after a fourteen-month battle. In this piece of creative nonfiction, I combine research and personal narrative to show what GBM is, the symptoms and side effects, and the possible treatments. Though GBM accounts for approximately fifteen percent of all brain tumors, its severity warrants more social attention, especially since it is rarely seen in men and women under the age of forty-five. This piece is not only an exploration of my father’s own struggle and my life with him, but also an effort to raise awareness for GBM.
