THE PROGRAM

In many classrooms across America, teachers contend with classroom disruptions which can derail the focus of an entire group of students. There may be a variety of reasons why a teacher may have difficulty in leading the classroom. Difficulty may be due to small inconsequential disruptions or to more formidable problems involving student behavioral issues. Unfortunately, the odds that a teacher will encounter a student with behavioral issues which will affect his or her classroom are high. According to the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA), some studies suggest that oppositional defiant disorder (ODD), which is a persistent pattern of disobedient, hostile, and defiant behavior toward authority figures, exists in 1 to 6% of the school-age population. SAMHSA also estimates that conduct disorder (also known as disruptive behavior disorder), which involves stealing, fighting or bullying, affects 1 to 4% of 9- to 17-year-olds, depending on how the disorder is defined. In addition, the National Institute of Mental Health estimates that approximately 3 to 5% of children have attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD), which means that in a standard classroom of 25 to 30 students, there will be one student with ADHD.

Teachers who instruct in elementary, junior, and senior high schools are invited to learn more about methods they can effectively use to create a positive learning environment, intervene in disruptive behavior, and regain focus with their students. Participants are eligible for five CPDUs through this workshop.

THE FEATURED INSTRUCTOR

Howard Hyde, M.A., M.Ed., has instructed and worked with high-risk youth as a teacher and dean. He has also worked in mental health organizations as a Behavior Services Consultant and as a Therapeutic Staff Support Counselor and has designed and revised Behavioral Modification Treatment Plans for at-risk children between the ages of 5 and 18 and for urban at-risk students ages 13 to 18. Mr. Hyde teaches a classroom management course for undergraduate and graduate students at Western Illinois University during the fall semester.

PROGRAM GOALS & OBJECTIVES

This workshop will provide practical tips and pointers in the areas of rules and procedures, discipline and consequences, teacher/student relationships, and mental set (emotion and stress management on the part of the teacher). Materials concerning various developmental diagnoses and their related behavioral manifestations will be included. In addition, participants will be offered a means to provide consistent, longitudinal self-assessment in these areas.

Upon successful completion of this course, the participant will be able to achieve the following:

• Apply practical rules and procedures.
• Identify common causes for, and the possible repercussions of, “problem student” behaviors.
• Identify classroom management principles and theories in the classroom.
• Engage in consistent and longitudinal self-reflection on classroom management with the aim of improving instructional and behavioral management responses to student behaviors.

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

• Elementary school teachers
• Junior high school teachers
• High school teachers
