

Fraternity and Sorority Life

It is always recommended to include your Fraternity and Sorority Life involvement on your resume. You have likely gained valuable experience in recruitment, fundraising, leadership, communication, teamwork and MUCH more. The importance of the skills you have gained from this experience can often separate you from other candidates applying for the same jobs. Showcasing your teambuilding skills is another excellent idea.

Using Fraternity and Sorority Life to stand out from other candidates is key. Highlight the ethical and value-based experience that a sorority or fraternity offers through the chance to work on a team. In addition, it can provide a unique set of networking opportunities when you list it on your resume.

Think specifically about what skills (instead of which tasks you completed) that have allowed for personal growth. For example: did attending multiple weekly meetings help you to improve your time management skills? Were you provided with opportunities to speak in small groups, large groups? Did your public speaking skills improve? How about your written and verbal communication overall? Expand on your leadership abilities, event planning, teamwork, organizational and time management abilities.

Think about the skills you developed instead of the tasks you performed!
